From the President & CEO

‘Cooperation among cooperatives’

By Rich Bauer

WEATHER can be the worst enemy of any electric company. When the weather is bad and most people want to stay inside, our linemen are heading out to do their job. When Hurricanes Harvey and Irma hit the United States in back-to-back weeks, several million people lost power in a matter of hours.

Being a part of an electric cooperative, you are owners in a unique company that operates differently than most companies. Even though we are relatively small (approximately 23,000 members), we are part of a much larger network of cooperatives across not only Pennsylvania, but the rest of the country, too. Electric cooperatives operate in 47 states, but all 900-plus cooperatives follow the same set of principles and operate much the same way. One of the most unique aspects of this is that even though we are all separate companies, we don't compete against one another. Instead, we are there to support one another, especially in a time of need.

After Hurricane Irma hit Florida and worked its way up the eastern United States, our statewide organization, the Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association, received a call from Jackson Electric Membership Corp. (EMC) in Jefferson, Ga., for assistance. Within an hour, 10 cooperatives in Pennsylvania, including Valley, offered crews to go to Georgia and help our sister cooperative. Forty-six linemen left the comfort of their homes in Pennsylvania on Sept. 12 to help their fellow Georgia members. The best part of being a cooperative is that all of the 900-plus cooperatives in the nation follow the same set of construction standards. When our four linemen arrived in Georgia, they didn't have to be trained on how to rebuild the lines, because it was the same way that we do it up here in our service territory.

Jackson EMC requested our crews for a minimum of two weeks to help with the restoration. That may seem like a long time, but as I noted, Valley is a 23,000-member cooperative, while Jackson EMC has approximately 221,000 members, almost 10 times our size. Our crews didn't hesitate when the call came in for help because they know that what goes around comes around. There will be a time, hopefully not for a very long time, that we will need assistance due to a natural disaster, and I know help will only be a phone call away. That is what “cooperation among cooperatives” means. Alone, we can only do so much, but together we can accomplish almost anything.

I hope that you enjoy the season. Please remember that your Valley REC crews will be out there in the worst weather, to make sure that you are enjoying safe, reliable electric service each and every day. If you have any questions, comments or thoughts, please feel free to call me anytime. Take care and God bless.

Meet your employees ...

FEATURED in this column is a recent addition to the Valley REC team, Eric Yingling. Eric was hired in February as an electrician for Valley's new service arm, Valley Rural Energy Services (VRES).

Eric is from Hesston, Huntingdon County, and is a 2004 graduate of Huntingdon Area High School. He enlisted in the Marine Corps while a junior. After graduation, he served four years in the corps as an electrician and was stationed at Camp Lejeune, N.C. His service included three tours in Iraq.

After being honorably discharged, Eric worked for his father's business, J.D. Yingling Construction of Hesston, building custom homes. He also worked for three years as an electrician for Norfolk Southern Railway, at the Juniata shop near Altoona.

"It was interesting work; we built new locomotives," Eric says.

A Valley member now, Eric also grew up in a household served by the co-op. When he had the opportunity to come on board, he knew he'd be an integral part of Valley's new venture designed to provide electrical services to residents who need smaller jobs done in a hurry.

"We do new installations, upgrades and services for campers, anything electrical," Eric says. "It could be as simple as moving a receptacle."

His work also includes installation of Bosch heat pumps, Marathon water heaters and Generac whole-house generators sold by the co-op.

Eric says his co-workers have been great to work with. And he enjoys the challenge presented by VRES.

"No two days are the same," Eric says. "It's always something new."

Eric and his wife, Kylie, have two daughters, Lennox, 3, and Sawyer, 1.

"They keep me plenty busy," he says.

When he does have some spare time, Eric enjoys hunting, fishing and long-range shooting.

Eric's co-workers are glad to have him on the job. He's one of the people you can count on. 🌟

ON BOARD: Eric Yingling is one of Valley Rural Electric Cooperative's newest employees. He was hired in February as an electrician with the co-op's new service arm, Valley Rural Energy Services (VRES).

Valley REC hits two-year mark for Marathon water heater sales

By: Doug Roles

Vice President, Member Services

THIS fall marks the two-year anniversary of Valley REC offering Marathon water heaters, a top-of-the-line electric storage tank heater that is durable and efficient.

The co-op has sold more than 120 of the units in the past two years. Many of them were bought by members who received substantial rebates on the purchase because they participate in Valley's demand response program.

"The reaction has been very positive," says Travis Kuhstos, Valley REC's energy specialist. "This is basically the Cadillac of water heaters."

Travis says consumers don't give much thought to their water heaters, until they either quit heating or have a structural failure and cause a small flood. But Marathon owners shouldn't have to give much thought to their water heaters because they should be the last ones they ever buy.

"The lifetime warranty offered by Rheem is huge in the water heater world," Travis says.

And the warranty is transferable. So, if a homeowner sells a property, the new owner gets the warranty.

Travis says the Marathon is timeless because there are no materials on it to degrade or degenerate. The water heater features a seamless fiberglass shell and two and one-half inches of spray foam insulation. Marathon uses a titanium heating element that is resistant to corrosion and the tank is resistant to lime build-up.

They don't use an anode rod, the sacrificial metal fixture that reacts with minerals and can cause the all-too-common sulfur smell.

"Depending on where you're located, calcium buildup and sulfur smell can be a real issue," Travis says.

The water heaters feature a factory-installed vacuum-relief fitting, a valve that prevents air bubbles from developing in the tank. And they're easier to flush out because of the bowl-shaped drain at the bottom of the unit.

"Even the wiring box on them, I think, is a lot easier than those on your run-of-the-mill water heaters," Travis adds.

That's good for do-it-yourselfers. For those not comfortable with wiring, the co-op offers installation through Valley Rural Energy Services.

Prices range from $800-$1,200, depending on the size of the unit. Valley members who participate in the co-op's demand response program are eligible for a $2-per-gallon rebate on water heaters of 50-79 gallons. A $3-per-gallon rebate is offered on water heaters 80 gallons and larger.

The rebate applies to any water heater with a 0.9 or higher Energy Factor rating.

Valley's demand response program is a load management program in which participating members help the co-op stabilize its wholesale power bill by allowing their water heaters to be temporarily shut off during peak-use periods.

"These Marathon units are a perfect fit for our demand response program," Travis says. "You could shut them off for 24 hours and they're only going to lose 5 degrees of water temperature. We don't control that long during our demand response control periods, but in a multi-day outage, those people with Marathon water heaters would still have hot water." 🌟
