Paying attention to your use is key to avoiding high bills

By Doug Roles, Vice President of Member Services

OCTOBER is a month of transition. Leaves are changing. Temperatures are dropping. And the summer clothes are being packed away and their drawer space taken over by sweaters and flannel shirts. This month is also one of transition where energy use is concerned.

October is National Energy Awareness Month and a good time to think about how energy use changes with the seasons. Right now, consumers are switching from cooling needs to the heating needs of winter months. Chillier weather will also cause people to spend more time indoors, leading to increased energy use. Keeping an eye on consumption and finding no-cost or low-cost ways to conserve can keep you from unexpected high bills.

For nearly everyone, the electric bill is a top priority in the household budget. After all, electric service powers other services and amenities. In the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, many consumers have had to balance utility bills and groceries against less necessary items. But how can you tell what amount of your budget should be earmarked for electric service? What's the right size bill for you?

Unfortunately, there is no one-size-fits-all answer. That's because so many factors influence consumption. Some of these are family size, type of HVAC equipment, age of your house and efficiency of appliances. Another factor, which is not easily measured, is the extent to which a person is willing to go to lessen use.

For most people, a reasonable approach to a reasonable bill is to just look for the small savings that add up over time. A simple starting point is to turn off lights and fans in vacant rooms. Since heating and cooling accounts for about half of the average utility bill, turning the thermostat down a few degrees when you'll be out of the house can lead to substantial savings.

Likewise, finding and fixing air leaks in your home will reduce waste. The Touchstone Energy pamphlet, "101 Easy Ways to Save Energy and Money," contains conservation tips you may have never considered. If you'd like a free copy, contact our member services department.

A great way to track your electric use is by using SmartHub, our electronic bill pay platform. Having your consumption history at your fingertips helps you see your highest-use months and plan accordingly. Look for it in the App Store or go online to valleyrec.com.

You may also want to consider levelized billing. Members who have been served by Valley REC for at least a year can enroll in this program to smooth out monthly electric bills. The program does not guarantee that your monthly bill is always the same amount, but it does spread the cost of your highest-use months over the bills for your lower-use months.

More energy-saving tools are available under the "Save Energy" tab of our website. And members are always welcome to call us with their questions. We'd be happy to help you conserve energy, during Energy Awareness Month and all year long.

Co-op couple built new Fulton County restaurant on faith, friendship

By Doug Roles

Vice President of Member Services

ANNE MARIE Hollinshead used to greet her gourmet eatery patrons through the take-out window of an 8x24-foot trailer. Now, she can visit with Wild Annie's followers tableside in a spacious new hillside restaurant.

Anne Marie and her husband, Eric — Valley REC members in Harrisonville, Fulton County — operated the food trailer from April to September, 2013-2018, at the Antietam Iron Works parking lot in McConnellsburg. Each October, they would also hit the road, trailer in tow, as a food vendor at area fall festivals.

Running a food trailer served as a practical way to determine if the region could support a traditional storefront featuring Wild Annie's burgers, wraps and salads. By the fourth season, Eric and Anne Marie were confident in their following. The transition from concessionaires to restaurant proprietors ran into several challenges but never derailed because of Eric's determination and Anne Marie's steadfast belief in a favorite Bible verse.

"Wild Annie's was built on faith, food and fellowship," Anne Marie says. "It's not just food. It's about taking care of people and community."

Since opening July 27, Wild Annie's 24 employees have focused on serving great food and maintaining the friendly, festive atmosphere that had been cultivated during the food trailer years, when five employees filled orders and customers had their pick of tailgating or sitting at several plastic picnic tables.

"Our regulars are here now every day," Anne Marie says. "Being able to walk up to these people at a dining room table has brought Eric and me a lot of joy."

Anne Marie is a Washington state native whose family moved to California for her dad's job. Eric, a Harrisonville native, joined the Marine Corps after high school and was stationed at Camp Pendleton when he met Anne Marie.

"I had a high school classmate who was at Camp Pendleton, and when he would get leave to get off the base ... he would bring along this guy from back East," she remembers.

After his enlistment, Eric and Anne Marie moved back to Harrisonville and married. She has always had dual interests in athletics and cooking. Her "Wild" moniker comes from her father, Jerry Books, because of her passion for outdoor sports. Jerry, who was part of Avalanche Rescue and National Ski Patrol, had Anne Marie on skis at age 3. She enjoys downhill slalom racing and has worked as a ski instructor at Whitetail Resort in Mercersburg. She has also coached soccer for McConnellsburg High School and Wilson College and enjoys kayaking. Eric works as the plant manager at Industrial Pallet in Greencastle and enjoys woodworking.

Layered between raising a family and work was the dream of a restaurant, but it was fraught with questions for entrepreneurs living in a sparsely populated area. In 2018, they made the leap and purchased an eight-acre parcel. The food trailer was sold for a down payment. Trees were cleared and the rope mock-up floorplan they had laid out in their back yard inched toward reality.

Eric and Anne Marie had a cheerleader in Jerry. He and his wife, Mary-Ann (Anne Marie's mother), moved to Harrisonville after retiring. Area residents will recall he ran a Christmas tree farm near his home and was active in community groups.

Anne Marie, Eric and all their family had high hopes for a spring 2019 opening. Sadly, Jerry passed away unexpectedly on April 7, 2019, in the midst of the project.

"He was our biggest fan," Anne Marie says. "He was so proud of this restaurant."

In addition to the blow to the family, Anne Marie and Eric found themselves bogged down in the state Department of Environmental Protection permitting process as the groundwater well had to be redrilled to a deeper depth and the size of a stormwater runoff basin was renegotiated. The offices of state Rep. Jesse Topper and state Sen. Judy Ward assisted the Hollinsheads in navigating the process. But then the coronavirus arrived in the U.S., and construction shut down for seven weeks. The project ended up taking a whopping 27 months.

Eric recalls he and Anne Marie knew they would face challenges. But he says that once their decision was made to move forward there was no going back.

"There were setbacks, sure,” Eric recalls. “But it wasn’t going to beat us.”

“He always says, ‘No whining, no excuses. Over, under, around or through, we don’t quit,’” Anne Marie agrees. “Even though there were some pretty rough, dark days.”

The result of their persistence is the newly completed pole building structure with a capacity for nearly 100 customers (current COVID-19 restrictions notwithstanding). Visitors are at once struck by the beautiful rustic barn interior and the homey atmosphere.

Restaurant customers will also notice the Wild Annie’s logo at several locations. The one imprinted on the floor inside the front door includes a reference to Psalm 16:11, which promises to put the faithful on the path of life and to fill them with joy. It’s a promise Anne Marie says has come to fruition.

Eric and Anne Marie’s path meant a fresh start. The only things they kept from the trailer were a commercial freezer, an ice bucket and their Wild Annie’s sign, which now hangs above the cash register.

The main dining area can seat approximately 60 customers while seating is also available on the enclosed patio. A dining area on the right side of the building seats up to 25. It can be reserved for events and features a large-screen TV for presentations. A set of rolling barn doors serves as a partition.

The food trailer was a workhorse but not a comfortable work area. There was no air conditioning, no restroom or break room, and not a lot of space for the five to seven workers staffing it. The new building has all that and more and boasts a food prep area adjacent to the main part of the kitchen.

The large open space in front of the cash register easily accommodates takeout orders and was designed around the idea that the food trailer was carryout only.

“That’s how we got where we are,” Anne Marie says, “from people who stood in line, stood in the rain.”

The Hollinsheads’ grown children, Sarah and Dillan, frequently lend a hand at the restaurant, as they did with the food trailer. Family friend Mary Huston, who has worked with Wild Annie’s since the start, now serves as the restaurant manager.

Eric and Anne Marie give a lot of credit to local contractors. R.H. Bunch Construction served as the general contractor. G.M. Shearer Plumbing & Heating installed ductless mini-split systems. The restaurant’s stoves and a fireplace insert in the dining room are fueled by propane from Heller’s Gas. Metalworker Wayne Keefer framed the restroom stalls and made the flagpole.

The dishes at Wild Annie’s are all homemade, so expect your order to take 20 to 30 minutes. One of the favorites is the Texas Hold ’Em burger, a six-ounce beef patty topped with cheddar cheese, crunchy fried onions and a slab of applewood bacon. Most food is sourced locally, with items coming from nearby Minestream Farm in Shade Gap (a Valley REC member) and Grace Farms. Wild Annie’s also makes its own condiments, sauces and house chips.

“I’m very excited about launching our dinner menu,” Anne Marie says, adding that one of her new staffers, Veronica Stone from McConnellsburg, is a recent graduate of Pittsburgh Culinary Institute.

Items still on the to-do list include building a rockery on the bank behind the building and incorporating a waterfall and herb baskets into the landscaping. Eric also wants to put up several large birdfeeders so that diners can birdwatch. And he wants to livestream trail camera footage to the TV monitor in the main dining room.

Additionally, he wants to complete several walking paths around the property and put in a picnic area. One of the paths will connect to the neighboring All Things Automotive car dealership property.

“We got a lot of vision, a lot of things we want to do,” Eric says.

Wild Annie’s is located on Lowry Drive, behind All Things Automotive, just north of the Route 30/Route 522 intersection. The restaurant can be reached by phone for takeout orders at 717-485-0847 or by email at wildanniesfood@gmail.com. 🌞

INVITING: Visitors can enjoy gourmet burgers, salads, wraps and a dinner menu in a warm atmosphere. Take-out orders can be placed online or by phone. Wild Annie’s is our newest Co-op Connections Card participant. Check out the listing on the previous pages for their offer and other discounts.
