Stay warm, safely, this winter

WHEN USED PROPERLY and safely, electric blankets and other heating devices can help keep you toasty during cold winter months. But careless use or overuse could result in an injury, property damage or a lighter wallet. Here are some things to consider before hitting the “on” switch for that winter warm-up.

The Electrical Safety Foundation and the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission recommend purchasing blankets and heating pads only if they have been approved by an independent testing facility, such as Underwriters Laboratories (UL). When you remove the new device from the packaging at home, before plugging it in, inspect all cords and connections for cracks and frayed edges, which are a huge fire and injury hazard.

Likewise, check your old blankets or heating pads for faulty cords. Discard your blanket or heating pad if you see dark or charred spots on the surface. Other safety points to consider are:

- Do not put another cover on top of an electric blanket unless the safety instructions included in the packaging specifically state it’s safe to do so. Some newer models protect against overheating.
- Once your electric blanket or heating pad is switched on, keep it laid flat — a folded device can cause a fire, as can a blanket that’s been tucked in (which can bend wires).
- Never use heated bedding while asleep — look for a model with a timer that switches off automatically.

If you choose to use a space heater to supplement your home’s heating system, some of the same guidelines apply, including purchasing a safety-certified model. Take a minute to think about where you’ll locate the heater. It should be kept three feet away from combustible materials—such as bedding, drapes, clothes, and rugs. Space heaters also have parts that can spark, so avoid using them in areas where you store flammable liquids like kerosene and gasoline.

It’s generally best to plug space heaters directly into a wall outlet. If you use an extension cord, make sure it’s the correct type and boasts the right wire gauge size for your particular space heater. Otherwise, use a wall socket that can handle the load.

mornings, but check your heater’s safety instructions before placing it too close to a water source.

If your children are like mine were growing up, they’re curious. So keep an eye on the kids when they’re around space heaters to prevent electrical shock and burns to exploring little fingers.

Though the calendar still says winter, we will see some warm days, like the 60-degree day already in early January. If your heater is not needed, unplug it and store it in a safe place.

One other thing to keep in mind with a space heater is the impact on your budget. Each winter members call us to report a bill that’s higher than normal. Often it’s from using a portable heater. For example, operating one 1,500-watt space heater for 24 hours will cost you $3.44. To get an idea what you’ll pay for the extra warmth, visit valleyrec.com, click on the “Save Energy & Money” tab and then input your use into the space heater calculator. Stay warm wisely; spring is just around the corner.

Cooperatively yours,

Crisis heating aid program now accepting applications

By Doug Roles

Director of Member Services

Rising fuel and food costs and other household expenses can leave little left over for winter heating bills. One option for residents having a difficult time keeping the home fires burning is the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program.

For those who are eligible, LIHEAP offers a cash grant paid directly to the utility company for households in immediate danger of being without heat. The LIHEAP Regular Crisis Program opened Jan. 2, as part of the overall 2012-13 assistance program that opened Nov. 1.

The "Crisis" program is for households in emergency situations because of broken heating equipment or lack of fuel. It also applies to termination of utility service, an impending shut-off or depletion of fuel.

"Everything remains the same basically from last year," Anne Bale, spokesperson for the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare, said. "Funding is about the same as last year."

Bale said the time it takes to process an application varies depending on the number of applications received, saying a really cold winter drives up requests. Information on LIHEAP is available by contacting county assistance offices or by going online to www.dpw.state.pa.us and clicking the "For Adults" link and then scrolling to the "Home Heating Assistance/LIHEAP" link.

"Applying online can help speed the process, for us and for applicants," Bale said.

The web site provides a benefit amount calculator. Visitors to the site can find information on benefit eligibility and amount by inputting their county of residence, heat source and family size into the calculator. Results are listed by income bracket. The LIHEAP hotline can be reached at 1-866-857-7095.

Bale said residents who do not meet LIHEAP income guidelines can still contact their county assistance office for information on other programs. She recommended the web site www.energy.savers.gov for information on ways to cut utility costs. The "Save Energy" link at the top of the Valley homepage (www.valleyrec.com) also provides information on using energy wisely.

Huntingdon Area High School sophomore Lane Baker (center) talks to Huntingdon District Manager Randy Boonie (right) and lineman Stephen Gutshall. Baker visited the Piney Ridge substation near Huntingdon during the high school's Nov. 14, 2012 job shadowing. He also shadowed Valley crews in 2011.

"I really want to do this as a career," Baker, who is also considering enlisting in the military, said. "You're outside a lot. And I'm taking electrician classes at vo-tech."

It takes a minimum of five years to advance from apprentice lineman to journeyman. "At that point you're considered a professional lineman," said Boonie. "There are a lot of training classes that we have through PREA (Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association), including a two-week climbing school."

While at the substation, Baker observed crews (at right) working to install a new 24,900-volt line to replace an older, lower-voltage line. The new line will allow rerouting of power during outages or when maintenance is performed in the area. The installation project is set to be completed by the end of January.

A glimpse into the future

Financial planning, choosing the right career are keys to furthering education

Valley REC accepting applications for Brighter Future scholarships

By Doug Roles

Director of Member Services

TWO BIG QUESTIONS for students considering post secondary education are which career path to choose and how to pay for the education to get started in that dream job. While many students will change majors in the course of their education, the need for a solid financial plan will not change.

Finding and applying for scholarships, such as the Brighter Future Scholarship offered by Valley Rural Electric Cooperative (see information below), can be a key part of the financial planning process that students should begin now for fall.

Megan Skillings, guidance counselor at Forbes Road School District, said each year she looks for new ways to help students search for scholarships and tries to make students understand there are organizations willing to help fund education through scholarships.

"I'm constantly saying it on the announcements and putting information on scholarships on the whiteboard by my office," she said. "I want the kids to take what they can because I know how much of a deterrent costs can be to going to school."

Skillings, a Roaring Spring resident, also hosts a financial aid night to help students and parents learn about the the starting point of applying for student aid, completion of the Free Application for Federal Student Aid. By the time students at Forbes Road begin filling out the FAFSA, they have completed an interest inventory, job shadowed and researched schools.

"In ninth grade we start a career portfolio project," Skillings said. "I think the biggest thing to recommend to students is to find a job that you love, so you'll never have to work a day in your life, I want them to find what their interests are."

It's not just high school seniors who need to work now to solidify plans for the fall start of school. Returning adult students often have to juggle the added concerns of childcare and household budgets when putting together a plan for furthering their education.

Valley member Katrina Kidd of McVeytown worked as a waitress "for many years" after high school before deciding to pursue a career in health care. A 2010 Brighter Future Scholarship recipient, she will graduate in May from Penn State Altoona's registered nurse program.

"It felt like the right occupation for me," she said.

Kidd advised those thinking about starting school to make sure their choice of occupation is one that will be in demand.

"Then just do it. Don't sit around and think about if you should do it. God will take care of it and it will happen," she said.

Kidd said she has done some part-time work, in tax preparation, while a student and also had times when she did not work at all to focus totally on her course load.

She found out about Valley's scholarship through Penn Lines magazine.

"It went straight toward tuition," Kidd said.

Tuition costs are among the top reasons students do not complete a degree. A National Survey of Student Engagement report in November found that most students surveyed worry about paying for college. As many as one in three respondents often opted to not purchase academic materials because of cost, the NSSE report stated. That's all the more reason to search for scholarships.

BRIGHTER FUTURE SCHOLARSHIP

For the fourth consecutive year, Valley will award up to 25 $1,000 scholarships to deserving students who apply. The money to fund this initiative comes from unclaimed capital credits refunds that previously had to be turned over to the state treasury. Thanks to the efforts of the cooperative's political advocates, those funds can be kept in our local communities.

Eligibility

To be eligible, any prospective student applying for a scholarship must be a Valley REC member or dependent of a member. Valley REC directors and employees and their dependents are not eligible. The applying student must be attending or planning to attend an accredited post-secondary institution. The applicant must be enrolled or planning to enroll as a full-time student for the 2013-2014 academic year. Previous Brighter Future Scholarship recipients are not eligible.
